Applied leadership skills offer positive results that apply to business, workplace settings, and educational institutions. Retired educator, Don Jefferies, will discuss his successful educational career that resulted in significant improvements at the school and district level in two states. His successful academic career included increasing test scores, passing rates, college admissions, dual credit programs, and reducing drug and discipline problems resulting in safer schools. Jefferies credits the wisdom of his father, a WWII veteran and mechanic, for the lessons he learned about leadership, productivity and job satisfaction.
